

INDIA AND THE UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS

The United Nations was born as a successor to the League of Nations in the year 1945, with the idea to prevent future wars and establish international harmony. Since inception, UN has been actively developing multiple plans of action to promote solidarity, socio-economic cooperation, and justice at a global level.

Today, the UN stands tall as a prime inter-governmental organization that aims to promote peace and order in the anarchical international system of states. One of the most promising initiatives taken up by the UN as an international agency towards conflict resolution and peace generation is the Peacekeeping. The UN Peacekeeping evolved in the turbulent times of 1950's. Over the years, UN peace-keeping has been committed to its noble initiative of helping the countries to navigate the difficult path of conflict to peace. Since the UN as an organization takes a firm stance for the principle need of peace in the world order, its idea of peace isn't restricted to the peaceful co-existence of the states, rather UN also views acts of aggression within the sovereign boundaries of states as a threat to world peace.

Under the banner of Peacekeeping, the UN provides assistance to the conflict-ridden states to attain a peaceful and conducive environment to flourish. The primary aim of its Peacekeeping is to attain peace through the non-violent means of negotiations and deliberations while military deployment is the last resort. UN Peacekeeping showcases an exemplary global partnership, as it brings together the Security Council, the General Assembly, the secretariats, troops from across the world, and the host governments in a combined effort to maintain international peace. Peacekeeping has a unique combination of strengths, which includes legitimacy, burden sharing, and an ability to deploy and sustain troops from around the globe yet remain empowering towards the conflict-ridden states. UN military deployment under Peacekeeping is to maintain stability and pave way for bilateral negotiations between the conflicting parties.

The UN's military Peacekeepers operate on a Triad of Principles:

- Consent of the parties to the conflict;
- Impartiality of the Peacekeepers;
- Use of force by the Peacekeepers only in self-defence and in defence of the mandate.

These principles, which remain at the core of UN Peacekeeping missions make it a legitimate and credible source of aid for the nations in times of turbulence.

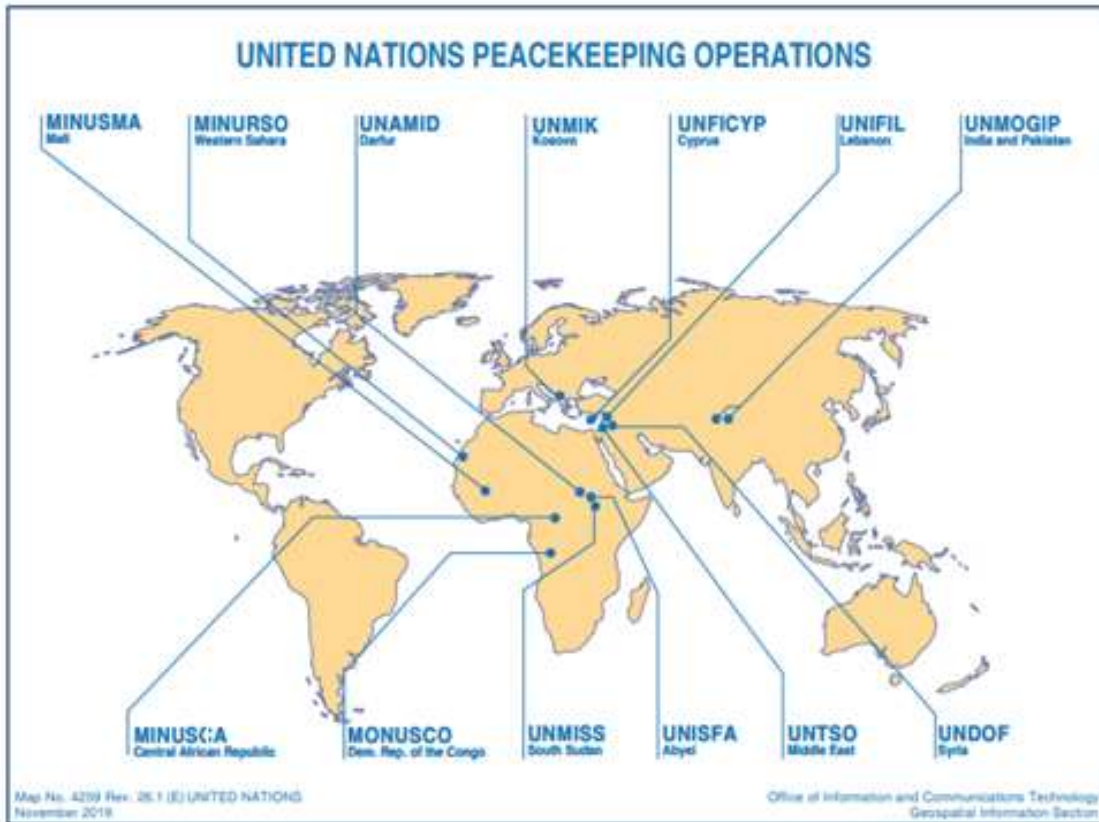

Over the years, the UN has garnered mixed reactions from the global community for its Peacekeeping, several Peacekeeping deployments have got accolades and cheers from across the globe, while some have been criticized for its failure in containing the conflicts. However, India can take pride in the fact that the undeterred commitment and participation of Indian Armed Forces personnel have received praise from the global community. Indian Armed Forces personnel through their dedication and determination towards international peace have set a benchmark for the rest of the world.

In a world full of disparities, military means is not the only dimension of conflict resolution. With the passage of time, the UN has developed a multi-dimensional approach to Peacekeeping. This approach involves the inclusion of civilian staff to build support for the peace process and foster reconciliation processes by promoting rule of law. In the past few years, the UN has appointed more than 14,000 civilians who have served in UN Peacekeeping operations and actively promote human rights.

United nations in its 77 years of contribution to building a global community has performed its role with aplomb and alacrity. It has truly helped the world in transcending the boundaries of a nation, class, tribe, and race. The towering efforts of United Nation Peacekeeping in promoting world peace has made them a recipient of the prestigious Nobel Peace prize in the year of 1988. The United Nations with its Peacekeeping efforts in the world has paved a map to global peace and harmony and continues to do so with every passing day.

INDIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO UN PEACEKEEPING

In the midst of the most turbulent times, when the world was desperately searching for a way towards peace, a man was drafting the very idea of peace and non-violence in a country that was yet to gain its independence. Mahatma Gandhi remains the foremost philosopher to espouse the principles of peace and non-violence. He has not just theorized them but has lived by his principles of non-violence. Indians take immense pride in carrying forward his legacy of Ahimsa (Non-Violence) into this contemporary world by collaborating with the UN to promote peace and non-violence across the world.

Indians for ages have lived by the concept of Vasudhavia Kutumbakam, (the whole world is my family) propounded by the ancient sages of India. The principle of 'the entire world, a family' continues to remain a bedrock of the policies and practices of Independent India. The UN and India working hand in hand for the shared goal of global peace is one of the finest examples that blends India's commitment towards the modern demands of the world with its ancient principles. India has a long-distinguished history of serving at UN Peacekeeping. Since both the UN and India share a common approach of promoting global peace through non-violence, India has strengthened United Nations reinforcements by remaining among the prime contributors of troops to its Peacekeeping force. In 77 years of the UN's existence, India has served in 49 of 71 UN missions. Our soldiers have shown dedication and determination of the highest order by serving in the most physically demanding and harshest environments. This act of devotion has also brought our forces worldwide applause and recognition. More than 200,000 Indian nationals have contributed to the UN Peacekeeping, till date.

However, with undiminishing glory comes sacrifices that often go unnoticed beneath the glitter. India has lost many of its resilient soldiers who sacrificed their lives for their duty. Our blue-uniformed have been achieving new milestones of gallantry by the display of supreme devotion to their duties.
